[From the Baltimore American.]
It would be well if the political discussions premeding elections were devoted to topics and characterized by sentiments and suggestions such as tendencies carried into social relations. The demand of the Native American party for increased security against Fractus in naturalization, and also for additional guarantees for the rich, the employed against the employer, and he denounces the inequalities which are found in social life as outrages upon the principle of the equal to the control of all mer.

rights of all men.

The Rich and the Poor: Are these two distinct classes permanently established in our system, the one hereditarily rich and the other inheriting poverty as an entailed succession? No; there is not any such organization of society here. The rich are generally so by means of their own industry and skill. Under our laws disowning primogeniture and providing for the distribution of property when it descends by inheritance, it seldom happens that the sons of wealthy parents are themselves so wealthy as to be independent of labor, or that they will long continue so if they are. The likelihood n the general run is that the poor men of one genera-ion will be the rich men of the next—and vice versu.

in the general run is that are powered in the general run is that are powered in will be the rich men of the next—and vice versal.

Again who are the Rich and who are the Poor? If by the former are meant those who live upon the proceeds of invested capital entirely, and by the latter those who are compelled to live by labor entirely, then there are but few of either sort in comparison with the bulk of our people. The intermediate classes, those who possess more or less wealth, who unite labor and capital together, its some proportion or other—they constitute the great some proportion or other—they constitute th

And I say it is the duty as it is the interest of the rich to see that the comforts and enjoyments of the poor be enlarged. Let them increase the extent of the public grounds—let these grounds be beautified with flowers, and fountains and statues—let the poor rain, when his daily told is over here.

What Western Whigs think of Nativism. From the Michigan State Journal, (Ann Arbor. Omnous:—A Natire American party, it is well known, has been formed in the Eastern cities and grown with astonishing rapidity. They started with rather ultra views, which, we are informed, have been since somewhat moderated. Yet the party in the city of Albany recently issued a manifesto, calling upon the people to organize "Native American and Protestant associations," in all the towns and villages. This is bringing religion or towns and villages. This is bringing religion, or rather dogmas about religion—directly into our political contests. It is the general opinion, that this would operate very injuriously upon the best would operate very injuriously apon the best interests of society.

We care not how American any party is—it cannot be too much 80. We are Americans. We have our own country, our own institutions, our glorious historical recollections, and American life, principles, thoughts and feelings. It is our duty to cher sh and sustain all these, and improve and perfect them. Among the most valuable of these The Rich and the Poor.

[From the Baltimore American.]

Id be well if the political discussions prelections were devoted to topics and chart by sentiments and suggestions such as staple of Dudley Selden's Speech at Natill in the City of New-York a few even.

For the most part the eloquence of the is becoming common-place and spurious and this their solution. It is our duty to feet them. Among the most valuable of these rights is religious freedom, the guarantees of mutual charity, forbearance for difference of opinion, the exaction of no tests but an orderly life, a patritic devotion to the highest good of our country, and an upright conduct in all private and public relations according to the principles of Christian brotherhood. This is all our institutions require, and this their solution. form the staple of DEDLEY SELDEN'S Speech at National Hall in the City of New-York a few evenings ago. For the most part the eloquence of the hustings is becoming common-place and spurious enough—a political speech is apt to be a farrago of balderdash, slang and old jokes, and political discussion generally, what is it but a mere re-chopping of cut straw?

There are graver matters to be considered in connection with our political and social tendencies than those which relate to the distribution of offices and the intrigues of dexterous politicians. Such a mere scramble has the competition for place become that the great body of the people are growing indifferent about the manner in which the public posts are filled; and while the stries of assirants and the struggles of contending rivals agitate the surface of the political world, the elements of other signations are slowly gathering in the bosom of society.—
These are rather social than political in their complexion; or rather, they are the results of political tendencies carried into social relations. The demission and an upright control is an upriciple of the principles of Christian relations and this their spirit does require of all. It is therefore very clear to our apprehension, that organizing and this their spirit does require of all. It is therefore very clear to our apprehension, that organizing and this their spirit does require of all. It is therefore very clear to our apprehension, that organizing whether Protestant or Catholic, is not an American principle. It does not harmonise with the spirit of our institutions. We should object too to the word Native, as a principle. It does not harmonise with the spirit of our institutions. We should object too to the word Native, as a principle. It does not harmonise with the spirit of our institutions. We should object too tenter of the Atlantic he was born. As to an extension of the term of residence before naturalization, that is a question for the American people to decide. They have a perfect right to extend that term to ten or twenty years, if they think best. No people under the sun can call in question our right to do this thing. If we should think it proper we will do it.

In the mean time we hold it to be a grievous worst to our county and to foreign immigrants.

In the mean time we hold it to be a grevous wrong to our country and to foreign immigrants themselves, to drag them into our political controversies, exerting to a dangerous patch their prejudices and bad possions, as soon as possible after their arrival in the country. The demagogues who do this are next to the devil himself the worst enemies of adopted citizens. Immigrants from foreign countries should be fairly and kindly treated, and all needful assistance to enable them to adapt themselves to a new country, should be freely

To the general subject of the relations between the more and the less wealthy, the rich and the poor, the possessors of capital and the sons of labor, Mr. Sanzon devotes the main portion of his speech. And this is the real point to which the thoughful consideration of the best and ablest men in the country ought to be directed. Dwelling together in one community, forming parts of one body social, the rich and the poor—subject to vicissitudes which may at any time bring about mutual changes of position—hold important relations to each other which may at any time bring about mutual changes of position—hold important relations to each other which may at any time bring about mutual changes of position—hold important relations to each other which may be any time bring about mutual changes of position—hold important relations to each other which may at any time bring about mutual changes of position—hold important relations to each other which may at any time bring about mutual changes of position—hold important relations to each other which may at any time bring about mutual changes of position—hold important relations to each other which may at any time bring about mutual changes of position—hold important relations to each other which may at any time bring about mutual changes of position—hold important relations to each other which may at any time bring about mutual changes of position—hold important relations to each other which may at any time bring about mutual changes of position—hold important relations to each other which may at any time bring about mutual changes of position—hold important relations to each other which may at any time bring about mutual changes of position—hold important relations to each other which may a time the dead of the position in the material may are also beca

THE LAST LOOK OF BYRON.

From a series of interesting recellections in the Boston Atlas.) In the month of July, 1824, the body of Lord Byron was brought from Missolonghi to England, and, on being landed from the "Florida," was removed to the house of Sir Edward Knatchbull, who then resided in Great George-street, Westminster. At the house of Sir Edward it lay in state for two days, and was visited by hundreds of persons, who paid their last tribute to the genius of the mighty slumberer, by gazing on his coffin-lid. After the lying in state had terminated, it was found necessary to remove the body, for the purpose of placing it in better constructed leaden coffin than that which had been prepared in Greece. A friend of mine happened to know the undertalter, and kindly offered to procure me, admission to the chamber

"All sold and all serene."

Were I to live a thousand years, I should never, never forget that moment. For years I had been intimate with the mind of Byron. His wondrous works had thrown a charm around my daily paths, and with all the enthusiasm of youth I had almost adored his geaus. With his features, through the medium of paintings, I had been familiar from my boyhood; and now, far more beautiful, even in death, than my most vivid fancy had ever pictured, there they lay in marble repose.

In the first place this is the dividend on about ten months of active operations. 2d, at least one-fourth of our time has been unavoidably wasted in unproductive industry—about one hundred and twenty-seven weeks of which were consumed in organizing, before a single day's work was done; and the rest in moving about, building a large shantee, and crowding each other into corners, for want of elbow room, &c. 3d, we could not labor to advantage, being scattered over the domain, at

THOMPSON'S TRUSSES, Office 13 Bookman street. About 300 of the first physicians and surgens of New-York have given their decided preference to this Truss, as you can graduate the pressure from one to fifty pounds on the rupture, without a back pad, which does so much injury to the spine. A fair trial being the best test of its superiority, it is applied and six days' trial given; and if it does not retain the rupture, while performing every kind of exercise or coughing, and give perfoct ease—in a wors, if it is mot satisfactory in every respect, the money is cheerfully returned; and this is the only condition on which you should buy any Truss. A permanent cure is easily effected, and warranted, if directions are followed.

Those sending for this Truss need only mention the side ruptured and the measure round the hips, as they can graduate the pressure to suit their case. Sold wholesale and tetal at 13 Beek man-st.
